Dear Sirs:

I wish to report the following possible interplanetary phenomena seen last evening about 8:30 P.M., June 15, in New York City in the sky above Central Park around 92nd Street between Madison and Fifth Avenues.

I was sitting on a porch looking up, and so suddenly it was breath-taking, I saw a small object (darkish in color) take a bit of a nose-dive into a cloud and completely disappear, nor did it appear again. Directly following it, a rather narrow long-cigar shaped trail of light or fire appeared in the sky and moved in a horizontal direction for about one minute and a half, then that also disappeared into a cloud and was not seen again.

My son saw the same thing, but by the time he ran for his telescope, it had vanished.

Had there been nothing more than the small dark object disappearing, I may not have felt it worth reporting. The light or fire trail made me wish to tell about it.

This is submitted for whatever interest it may add to the various reports you are receiving from numerous spectators everywhere.

Yours very truly,

[REDACTED]
